AccuPlace introduces AEvo labeler with zero-queue printing at MDM - ATX West Show in Anaheim

Whether it is in the medical device manufacturing or in laboratory environments: high standards are required when it comes to product identification – the use of barcodes or other unique product identifiers is often times mandatory. AccuPlace is introducing its newest labeler and print & apply model 'Ævo' which allows precise label printing and placing.

“Based on the same machine model, two principally different processes can be carried out: applying labels and complex die cut components, as well as print & apply,” says Manny Montero, Market Segment Manager Life Sciences at AccuPlace. “At the MDM show we will demonstrate printing of barcode labels and applying them accurately onto vials. New functions, simple operation as well as the small foot print of 22” deep and only 7” wide validate the use of this machine in a broad variety of applications.”

On-demand serialized printing with zero queue

The just introduced print & apply labeler Ævo makes auto-identification easy: A 300 dpi thermal print head integrated in the machine prints unique barcodes or product information with zero queue. With a placement accuracy of +/- 0.002"/0.05 mm. and an improved patented peeling and placing technology, this system provides ultimate accuracy and process reliability. Placement of odd shaped parts can be done as easy as placement onto odd shaped devices. The labeler works with all standard available label design programs and has a web based (TCP/IP) machine interface for highly advanced and intuitive machine parameter setup. Minimal mechanical adjustments allow for easy component changeover. No tools are required for routine maintenance.
